SUGGESTED ANSWER

That day I didn't postpone/delay/hadn't postponed /delayed writing the composition until the very last moment. I (had) started writing it in the early hours of the afternoon/in the beginning of the afternoon and finished it only when I heard my mother calling me to come to dinner from the bottom of the stairs. Twenty copybook pages which I had written with a strange, new/fresh joy; as if, all of a sudden, I had found myself in one of the worlds of the books I had already read, the only real worlds that meant something to me; (as if I had) written like those professional/real authors/writers – those (whom/who) we hadn't studied/didn't study at school at the time - and I had written just to be read by a person like me rather than by a teacher, in order to get a mark/grade.
